

LOON LAKE LIVE

SUMMER CONCERT SERIES

2019

About the composer:

Florence Price (1887-1953) is recognized as the first African-American woman to have a composition played by a major American orchestra - her Symphony in E minor, premiered by the Chicago Symphony in 1933. In addition to this distinction and to her work as a symphonist, Price was a composer of smaller scale works for solo piano and organ, vocal ensembles, and instrumental chamber music. Originally from Arkansas, she studied piano, organ, and composition in Boston at New England Conservatory, and later lived and worked in Atlanta before ultimately settling and becoming successful in Chicago. Price's compositional style is a mixture of her European traditional training and her own folk influences from the American south. She deftly intertwines these and creates a sound that resonates with the listener as if it's the thousandth hearing instead of the first.

About the piece:

String Quartet in G major was composed in 1929 when Price was 47 years old. It is a 2 movement work. The second movement Andante Moderato performed here is an A-B-A form with the outer A sections deeply rooted in a spiritual type sound, and the middle B section contrasting in a playful improvisatory sound. This recording is from a performance in July of 2018 at Church of the Assumption, Redford, NY and features Annie Trépanier and Aaron Packard on violins, Catherine Beeson on viola, and Melissa Westgate on cello. Enjoy this archived recording with images curated by Mel Aman.
